DMV Photo Receipt

In May 1999, the California Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) began using a new driver license (DL) and identification (ID) card photo process. Part of the process involves issuing a photo receipt to a customer who needs additional testing in a DMV office. The photo receipt is used to identify the customer while he/she is in the field office and an application is in progress. It was not intended to be used as a form of identification outside the application process. A sample of the photo receipt is shown below.

This information is being provided to you so internal processing documents are not accepted by businesses to verify a person's identity.

Please distribute this information to affected locations and/or employees.
